

Management Trainee for Finance, UFLP 2014 (Unilever)

How do you go beyond the huge figures associated with multi-billion pound brands and get to the heart of what they mean? And how would you transform a product that's already doing impressively into something that's truly astounding? What will you do? Finance at Unilever is about a lot more than numbers. It's a craft that requires you to get to the heart of multi-billion pound brands. People will seek your advice on brand development, pricing strategy and more – and they'll trust you to see past the figures to the bigger picture. You'll be involved in evaluating the benefits of innovation on major brands like Dove and Lipton, and be in the thick of pricing strategy and investment decisions.

Over several placements you'll get you up to speed with our operations, processes and risks. You'll get a chance to work in cross-functional teams with other business functions. By getting involved with financial accounting, management reporting and analysis, you'll experience real work straight away. Who is it for? We do not require a financial/economic degree, but we do require people with strong analytical skills.

We look for people who want to get to grips with the inner workings of a vast business and a desire to understand how it works. It's about commitment, real people skills and a deep-seated interest in the business as a whole.

The Finance experience you'll gain during UFLP

Business partnering: Finance Business Partners embed best practice and offer financial expertise in critical decision-making in the business.

Finance transactions: Accounting and Information uses information management processes to create value for the business.

Expertise: Expertise ranges from insurance and risk to investor relations and pensions. Specialise in an area such as audit or treasury.

Customer development or supply chain: Develop a deeper understanding of customer and trade marketing or sourcing and supply management.
